

The new Patricia Doyle Collection

Patricia Doyle, a retired teacher, enthusiastic historian and fixture in historic downtown Georgetown, has donated a sweeping collection of books that explore local history to the Georgetown Library.

Some of the books have been added to the Local History Room, where they can be accessed for scholarly research. It's a fitting home for the books, since the room was named years ago for Doyle in a nod to her untiring efforts on behalf of local libraries and historical preservation. The majority of the books will appear in a special named reference collection on the main shelves at Georgetown Library.
